The Great Eye

In the beginning of the 20th century, fashion magazines became more influential on people than in the past. In cities throughout the world, these magazines were greatly sought-after and had a profound effect on public clothing taste. Talented illustrators drew exquisite fashion plates for the publications which covered the most recent developments in fashion and beauty. Fashion Styling became a buzzword in the fashion circuit. Individuals from Grace Kelly to Alexander McQueen were known for their deep sense of Styling. Celebrities, Socialites, Film Stars and even the common man on the hi-streets of New York, Paris, London, Tokyo or Mumbai were covered by the media. Fashion Styling became a new age career in the boom of media & technology.

A Fashion stylist is one who selects clothing to be published in editorial features, print or television advertising campaigns, music videos, concert performances, and also for any public appearances made by celebrities, models or other public figures. Stylists are often part of a larger creative team, collaborating with fashion designers, photographers, art directors, hair stylists and makeup artists to put together a particular look or theme for a specific project. A Wardrobe Stylist can also be referred to as a fashion stylist, fashion editor, or celebrity stylist. “Wardrobe Stylists are people who encourage each celebrity to make to the best dressed list of their genre.”

Stylists in the editorial and celebrity fields work primarily with designer samples. High-level stylists may collaborate directly with designers to produce custom clothing for celebrity clients or editorial clients; this is common for celebrity stylists whose clients attend awards shows, and for fashion editors at the best magazines. Stylists may also provide services such as personal shopping, restructuring a client’s entire wardrobe, reorganizing a client’s closet, or other duties relating to the client’s personal lifestyle. A wardrobe stylist is distinct from a costume designer, the person who clothes fictional characters in film, television or theater.

Some Design schools now offer specialised courses in becoming a Fashion Stylist. Stylists in the past acquired professional skills and knowledge just by assisting other established stylists, in a system similar to apprenticeship. An assistant stylist’s responsibilities can vary greatly depending on the stylist and the assignment. According to one report in Seventeen Magazine, there were no specific education majors earlier helpful for becoming a fashion stylist, but degrees in fashion design, merchandising, communications, marketing, art history and photography were helpful, and overall it was important to read fashion magazines regularly to develop this.

"Great Eye for Fashion"!

Besides great creative talent, a knowledge of the Semiotics of Clothing, History of Art & Dress, Fashion & Cultural Contemporary perspective, Fashion writing Skills & Criticism, Understanding of Fashion editorial & magazine design are a prerequisite for becoming an excellent stylist.

She has also worked for the very celebrated Toronto International Festival and is presently working as Faculty member in the Fashion Dept. at ARCH Academy of Design, Jaipur.

“As far as I am concerned, Styling is an integral part of Fashion. I believe in simplicity and that’s where Styling is. It can make something ‘simple’, look very gorgeous and elegant. The Indian market has understood this and thus special accessories brands have come up today. Without appropriate Styling the most expensive attire can also lose its charm. Everything is important in Styling, from your hair to the footwear, even just a simple ring, everything is important. Whether you want to carry a simple look or a grand look, elegant Styling is the key.”
Nomana Chakraborty, Model

“Just having a designer outfit doesn’t make you look stylish...!! its important to style ur outfit well... u can look classy, bohemian, casual, traditional just by the way u style ur outfit...!!”
My favorite styling accessory are bags...!! I love them in all shapes and sizes!!
Ushoshi Sengupta Model

Whenever the term “style” is used, it most commonly refers to one’s fashion or outer appearance. But I want to remind you that style is much more than your shoulder length haircut, fashionable coat, or your Ferragamo dress or Marc Jacobs shoes. It’s the total combination of the way you dress, talk, move your body, or do anything for that matter. Simply put, it’s how we express our inner being outwardly. This includes all of our thoughts, emotions, interests, and values. Everything on the outside is merely a reflection of what’s on the inside through color and form. I like to think of myself as a “self-expression coach” though, because I firmly believe that fashion is the life enhancing part of your style.

It was sometime in the early 1990's that India had started staking claim to the crown worn so far by the glamour queens of the “other world”. The success of Indian beauties caught my interest and set my imagination on fire and I suddenly wanted to be a part of this new found world of fashion.

It is almost 17 years since I began this journey. It was by providence that I happened to be studying at R D National College in Mumbai which is known for its glamour quotient. Experimenting came easily as available opportunities boosted my chances of finding a foothold in the fashion industry.

College provided a good platform to learn and understand the toolbox of a choreographer which went beyond the obvious and incorporated a wider dimension of brushing up skills related to make up, design, backstage co-ordination, casting etc.

The experiences that I gained were not only creative but more importantly were technical in nature giving me an overview of the skills required to be a good choreographer. These learnings translated into experience as college gave us an opportunity to use them for various shows. These stay with me even today helping me enhance my abilities.

The choreographer needs to give a creative direction to the entire show. This involves understanding the mood that needs to be recreated through the deft co-ordination and fusion of elements of light and sound. Apart from the way the models carry the garments, portrayal of the correct body language is very important. Akin to making a film, a choreographer needs careful backstage planning requiring good on the spot decision making and team work skills.

For those of you who aspire to be in the field of choreography, there is already a window available to you and can be accessed through the television and the Internet. Both provide not only information and technology but also have a stock of creative visuals to help you understand other people’s approach to their work. It is important to understand and relate to the evolving trends in this industry if you want to understand the elements and fine tune them.

It has been a roller coaster ride across the length and breadth of India, through its many hidden pockets. The international lines run across many countries - Thailand, Russia, UAE to name a few, where I worked with many big brands like Aigner, Calvin Klein, Gucci, Armani, Just Cavalli, Mango, Aldo, Charles & Keith, la senza and so on & so on .....

Working in the International arena with major brands and world famous designers gave me a deep insight into understanding what it takes to be a good fashion choreographer. Apart from excellent technical skills, one needs to have a vision in creating a visual delight for the audience. Self determination and self-improvement has no end to them and requires small doses of success.

This is the reason why there are very few who have made their mark in the industry having the technical prerequisites to go beyond the obvious. There is space for many more, and choreography can be a very lucrative career with better pay packets with passage of time. Be true to yourself and dedicated to your work and clients.

I achieved the milestones in my career with LUCK - Labour under Correct Knowledge. So Get Lucky, people!!
Arch conceptualized & created the mesmerizing Gaba GRADUATE Fashion Show

The show was focused on the work of graduating students from the Fashion, Jewelry & Interior departments of the ARCH Academy of Design, Jaipur

by Tanvi Garg
Student Interior Design

The Interior Design department contributed their structural and space design expertise through Shafiq Khan a final year student of Interior design who incidentally was also awarded as the best Interior Design student of the year. He played an important role in designing the whole layout of stage, ramp, structures & seating arrangements of the audience.

The Gaba fashion show was conducted inside the Brij Convention Hall, an Environment Friendly green building in the premises of Hotel Clarks Amer, built up in 9500 sq. feet with a ceiling height of approx 30 feet.

The length and width of the designed stage was 44 feet wide & 8 feet deep and the ramp was 40 feet long and 8 feet wide and was built with a modular understructure of iron and a surface of wooden panels covered by white canvas. Two 10 feet high LED screens with a combined length of 24’ was the backdrop on the stage with wheels running on tracks and their movement completely computerized. As programmed, the two screens would come together for large visuals and part sideways when it was time for the entry or exit of models.

The dramatic lighting included parcan lights, LED par and moving head lights. Seating was organized for 700 people with two strategically placed rows given to media persons, for uninterrupted coverage of the event.

The event was a grand success as evidenced by a jam packed hall and the newspaper reports published the day after.

Behind the scene was a dedicated team of faculty members, staff, students and supporters who put in their sweat & hard work to make the event what it was.

Our sincere acknowledgment for the team members who put together an exciting and mesmerizing event —

Fashion Dept. - Kunal Dutta, Sunita Yadav, Nandan Ghiya, Aparna Yadav, Tarang Arora, Aaftab, Bhawna, Ram Ratan

Rangshala Collection

Rangshala - a colorful Fashion Jewelry collection blends the traditional Lacquer jewelry art of Rajasthan with modern inputs by young designers of Jewelry Design Semester 4. The collection took its inspiration from Venetian Masks, Madhubani Paintings of Bihar, Ikat work of Orissa, Gond art of Chattisgarh, & was designed by Aditi Patel, Amisha Bhag, Vidhi Sanghani, Swati Bhardwaj, Ridhi Chowdhary, Vikas Soni, Vicky Kumar, Pratibha Singh, Prachi Sharma and Shafali Mistra. The jewelry pieces are manufactured by lac artisans of Bagruvalon Ka Rasta. It was a joint effort of ARCH and ACCESS Development Services to upgrade the skill sets amongst artisans through Design Intervention. The 3 months project was mentored by Indrajit Das, Head of Department, Jewelry and Accessories and Vidyut Ajmera of ACCESS.

Transition of the Cultural Fabric
THE PAST IN THE PRESENT

Munsiyari seemed to be the perfect place for a summer address as I made my way through the stone houses of Darkot village, their sloping slate roofs obscured from the view by the overhanging branches of large trees. The quiet village is known for its century old wooden houses. Coming around the bend I am greeted by the sound of looms spinning. The women of the respective houses are at work, weaving. Pointing to the rabbits in the cage, they explain how shawls and pattu are woven using their wool. Watching the spinning wheel, I am witness to a pashmina shawl coming alive.

Talking to the women, I ask them who taught them how to weave. The little girl points to her mother and her mother points to a jaded picture hung on the flaked wall, each connecting the dots of the generation. For each one, it was here before they were born. This is not an isolated story and nor are the characters fictitious. They form a part of the oral and visual narratives that have evolved from generations reflecting a gradual evolution of their cultural identity. The oral traditions which translated into objects of need and creativity reflected that of a place or a community.

Where do these visual narratives fit in the current context of the contemporary world where identity and dress can continue to be intimately linked? How does one retain the sense and sensibility of the generations of story tellers who depicted what they lived? In the fast changing “Global” scenario, how does one preserve the cultural identities which are a great risk as the world moves towards homogeneity? How do we as a society ensure that the story having different meanings is not relegated to a piece of cloth having a price tag and a brand name, where the “manufactured in...” is the only identification to the journey the product has undertaken, not a revelation to the source of its inspiration or the people behind its true conception?

Increasingly the current trends in the clothing industry have acquired a senseless pace where everyone wants to be ahead, where something new and different has to be churned out no sooner than one design is ready. The traditional works are being distorted, manipulated and coerced into speaking a language that none can understand or really relate to. That raises the very pertinent question- how to not only sustain the traditional works but to also ensure their adequate awareness for future preservation in generations to come.

In the process of globalization, the increasing need to borrow an idea or concept without understanding or being sensitized to their origins can have ramifications that can lead to erosions of cultural identities. So what has gone wrong? Have these traditional systems of beliefs and evolution outlived their place and relevance in the current business environment that surround us? Is modern man strangling the voices of traditional knowledge? Quintessentially speaking, artisans work has become so colloquial that almost everyone finds it easy to pick and apply to make it “fashionable”. Anything traditional has been labeled as “ethnic.” What once stood for individuality is now challenged by selective seduction.

“Clothing has been and continues to be”, is a significant expression and portrayal of cultural & ethnic identities, but is no longer strictly an expression of its cultural roots. In its evolution, it has moved to become an expression of identity and style.

So what does the future hold for the women of Darkot weaving, pashmina shawls? Will their stories be shown through a magnifying lens where future generations can look and see how they constituted the modern culture? Or will they be narrated as a folk tale, “once upon a time...”

Their traditional ways of stitching, weaving & designs should inspire the contemporary world designers. What is required is to carry forward its substance and key cultural values, combining art, craft, design and culture. We need to understand and follow their artistic intuition and experience involving them through the whole new and modern world of the design process.

by Rahul Gupta

Rahul Gupta lives in Jaipur and is a Landscape Designer by profession. He also teaches and in his spare time loves to travel, capturing his journeys through the lens and words.

They need to be made “partners in progress”, holding their hand and making them walk with the steps of modernity. Can we make their hearts beat in the body of our contemporary cultural imagination?

We can, and we should. Instead of fitting in, let some of us stand out. Let us not all be a part of the “cultural uniform”.

I am sure we can help today so that future generations of this village continue to point their fingers to their parents and grandparents as testimony of continuing traditions and everlasting faith.
Saudia Arabia occupies most of the Arabian peninsula, & is about three quarters of the size of India. The country has an amazing similarity with India in many ways- be it the vast desert stretches akin to Western Rajasthan & parts of Gujarat, or its people who have faced drought, famine and pestilence & have overcome them with their resourcefulness and sheer hard work. Or perhaps the rich Arabian heritage of arts and crafts both of the Bedouin and villagers of Saudia Arabia, now almost replaced by cheaper and new practical materials like plastic, nylon and aluminium, thanks to cheap imports from China and elsewhere.

While India is immense in terms of cultural diversity and population, Saudia Arabia’s limited diversity and clear cultural delineations are developed from natural geographical land barriers. India has perhaps the richest & biggest base of legacy industries in the world especially handicrafts. It inspires people both from the west and the east, who come here to understand how this largely informal artisanal base is providing large scale employment and incomes to both skilled and unskilled masses.

A delegation of Saudia Arabia was in Jaipur recently to explore Rajasthan’s myriad craft disciplines where there is a common thread of expression with crafts like handloom weaving, patch work & applique embroidery, leather especially camel leather crafts, rug weaving, silver jewelry and so on.

To compare the craft traditions of India and Saudia Arabia is a thesis in itself but an idea of the scope and direction of the comparison can be best understood by comparing population, land area & similar crafts:

Major and perhaps similar crafts

- Bedouin crafts like camel leather items/accessories like saddle bags, pouches, hand-woven rugs, Persian carpets, loom weaving, patch-work, embroideries, basketry, pottery, armory, tent walls, bands, curtains, rugs, date palm fibres, other ethnic food crafts, chappals & sandals, income-burners, bakkabs
- Hand-knitted carpets, woollen felt, Handicrafts of North East, Bihar, Andhra Pradesh, Bengal, Dried wax tiles, Prayer rugs, Natural fibres
- Camel leather, furnirure items, horse equipment, silver oxidised and heavy jewelery, stone cladded jewellery, blue art pottery (akin to Persian pottery), Jaishalmer Pata, Cotton Dhurias

While India has over the years kept its craft legacy intact barring a few aberrations, all those crafts of Saudia Arabia have unfortunately gone into oblivion and most of the connoisseurs of ancient craft traditions have been converted into consumers of luxury brands of the West. In many ways, Indians are unfortunately following this disastrous path of aping the Western trends!

It is here that India has to learn a lesson on how to preserve its legacy industries, which are incidentally also the bases for employing masses, and not repeat the mistakes made by Gulf nations like Saudia Arabia! Otherwise there is a big danger of losing the country’s identity along with its rich history and distinctive culture and heritage!
National Level Seminar on 'Effect and Effectiveness of Design Education' at Arch Academy of Design, Jaipur

ARCH Academy hosted a panel discussion on 18th July during ARCH's Graduate Design Week 18-23 July, 2012 on 'Effect and Effectiveness of Design Education'

The field of design is attracting a lot of young talent. Design has a different meaning for different people and therefore it is important to collectively work out creative solutions to address the global challenges for the future by using elements of Good Design in all our products & services for mankind. At the same time the onus is on policymakers & academicians to identify and fill the gaps in Design Education to make it more meaningful & rewarding.

Archana Surana, Founder and Director, ARCH

Design is an ever expanding field, it cannot be contained in one box. Modern living gives way to ever increasing needs for comfort and style but the supply of good designers is not adequate to fulfill the demand. What consists good design & who is a good designer? What are the challenges of design education and what needs to be done to revamp curricula, if at all? Design per se does not seem to have its own entity; it is being used by other faculties to define its existence & usage.

Yunus Khimani, Director, City Palace Museum, Jaipur
Moderator for the session

Design is a process, whereas all of it is experiential for us. The understanding of design as a process is necessary to put into perspective right sensibilities of the needs and functions of a product. Success is a shifting milestone for an individual in these days and Indian designers have to really work hard to understand the design elements thoroughly and only then can they claim to have made a contribution.

Dhiraj Kumar, Principal, International Institute for Gem & Jewelry, Jaipur

Designers are brimming with ideas when they graduate and it is our job to give them the right direction. A successful designer is one who has changed lives from the beginning to the end of the chain in the process, someone who has put smiles on many faces in doing so. A successful designer must also have enough exposure to take things ahead therefore practical hands-on exposure is paramount.

Vikram Joshi, CEO, Rangotri (hand-block printing boutique export-house)

We have somehow not been able to involve ourselves fully into answering the questions of what consists of a good design. It is important for a young design student to first read Indian heritage to find out the true meaning of design. Modernity has crushed the existence of crafts, the real legacy of our country. A great designer not only understands the needs of the market but holds the capacity to change the market demand by presenting new options before the consumers.

Prof. Chinmay Mehta, Muralist & Design Curator

Indian designers have really made a mark on the International Design scene. Indians have already made inroads in the global market with their strong aesthetic sense, so much so that many International designers are following Indian fashion trends in jewelry & clothing for instance.

Sonal Sawansukha, Designer-Entrepreneur (Owner Jewel SAGA)

The effect & Effectiveness of Design education can be gauged by the products and services we build & consume and the sensitivity built into the interface of use. Going by what one can see, we have a long way to go. Understanding perceived reality 'as is', unflinchingly, is the first step towards meaningful evolution & contribution towards truly useful achievement.

Benoy Thoompunkal, Dean, ARCH Academy of Design

The panel discussion saw a variety of new ideas and perspectives on Design which evoked enthusiastic response from the audience. Unanimous contemplation was that the young minds need the right direction & exposure and a great designer is the one who understands the needs of the market, has done his/her homework like understanding about heritage & legacy, has enough hands-on experience in Industry coupled with an evolved aesthetic sense as he/she constantly offers creative solutions to some of the persisting needs & necessities of the world.
